Calendar Quotable

“When you’re in a slump, it’s almost as if you look out at the field and it’s one big glove.”--
former Major Leaguer Vance Law has been quoted on many daily calenders with this saying.

Baseball-Softball Doubleheaders in Provo

BYU’s baseball (Larry H. Miller Field)-softball (Gail Miller Field) complex known as Miller Park was host to seven “doubleheaders” this season. On March 24 baseball hosted San Diego State, while softball hosted Weber St. On April 19, softball hosted Utah Valley while baseball hosted Utah. On April 21, softball hosted New Mexico, while baseball also hosted New Mexico; on April 22 & 23, softball hosted CSU, while baseball again hosted New Mexico. On April 28-29, softball hosted SDSU, then UNLV, while baseball hosted TCU in two TV games.

Regarding BYU This Season

- BYU has 10 players who are married (Ryan Bernal, Chase Frampton, Wes Guenther, Austin Hall, Alex Hancock, Matt Neil, Dane Nielsen, Blake Torgerson, Stephen Wells and Alex Wolfe).
- Incorporated into this year’s team are five players who have just finished serving two-year Church missions (Taylor Cole, Bret Lopez, Michael Peterson, Daniel Sechrest and Daniel Welch).
- Six players transferred to BYU (Taylor Cole is the newest transfer to BYU, joining from previous seasons Ryan Bernal, Alex Hancock, David McKnight, Jared Miller and Alex Wolfe).
- Among those who could throw batting practice to BYU again this season is former Cy Young winner Vernon Law (1960 Pittsburgh Pirates), father of BYU head coach Vance Law. Vernon turned 81-years-old on March 12 of 2011, had seven-by-pass heart surgery seven years ago and recently had his second knee replacement surgery.

Wolfe Cougar Club Honors at 2011 Y Awards Banquet

Alex Wolfe got two of BYU baseball’s three awards at last week’s annual Y Awards Banquet sponsored by the Cougar Club. Wolfe was named Comeback Player of the Year, given to the male or female athlete who has overcome incredible odds to succeed. Wolfe had been sidelined in 2009 with a medical redshirt.

He was also awarded the Play of the Year with his walk-off home run vs. Utah in 2010. Trailing 4-3, in the bottom of the ninth inning last April at Miller Park, BYU tied rival Utah to set up the heroics of Alex Wolfe, whose two-run walk-off home run brought 1,826 fans to their feet and his teammates from the dugout. With a one-one count, Wolfe hit an opposite-field blast over the leftfield wall to clear the bases. The win gave BYU the Deseret Duel’s baseball trophy for the third-straight year.

BYU baseball was also presented The Y Games Award for being at one home event for each of BYU’s 21 teams that all student-athletes are encouraged to attend. Attendance is counted at each of these Y Games, and the Y Games Trophy is presented to the team with the highest percentage of student athletes attending these events to cheer on their peers.

BYU Going to WCC in 2011

This is BYU's final year in the MWC since it will join the West Coast Conference next season. Here are a couple of interesting baseball facts on the WCC (BYU has a 49-54-1 record against that league). Pepperdine won the College World Series in 1992. Of the eight current WCC teams, only St. Mary's has not participated in the NCAA post-season tournament. BYU's 1-1 tie against Pepperdine came in the second game of a doubleheader in 1963. BYU's win-loss baseball records and last action against the current WCC teams is:
 12-13 vs. Gonzaga, 2011, split 2 games
 9-15-1 vs. Pepperdine, 2011, PU won 5-3
 9-8 vs. Portland, 2011, BYU won 7-6
 7-3 vs. San Diego, 1997, USD won 11-2
 6-1 vs. St. Mary's, 2006, BYU won 10-5
 3-6 vs. San Francisco, 2010, USF won 20-4
 2-5 vs. Santa Clara, 2004, split 2 games
 1-3 vs. Loyola Marymount, 1972, LMU won 13-7

Feats of Strength

By Jo'ell Steven Rouse, Houston's InOtherWord magazine, April, 2011

Dane Nielsen

The Bill Cosby-dramatized 1980s comedy about college life, the bright, wide-eyed kids with all the potential in the world who enter through institutional halls of higher learning and exit these corridors of knowledge enhanced, mature young professionals poised for the real world, career and service to community is something of a tribute to art imitating life.

Twenty-three year-old Dane Nielsen of Sugar Land, Tex., was but a juice cup-coddling toddler during the nostalgic TV show's heyday. Though in many regards he's a living testament to the show's universal premise of 20th Century American students transformed by the college experience.

Of course, now it's the 21st Century with a new generation of iPod, Smartphone and social networking euphoria, but some things haven't changed. The quirky, nuanced path of youth to adulthood that's defined generations of college grads is still just as pronounced. And Nielsen, nearing the end of his undergraduate studies on 34,000-strong Brigham Young's alluring campus, pulchritudinous Provo, Utah campus, has had quite the journey.

His unique encounter with education and personal growth opportunities as they've presented themselves go beyond classroom walls, athletic venues and career counseling.

It's what made him not only a fine infielder and senior leader on the BYU baseball team this season. It's what contributed to making him a fine student, proud husband and father with a stronger sense of purpose and new hunger for life.

"BYU has been an amazing experience," he said. "And with the two years I spent in Mexico, I definitely feel like I left an 18-year-old boy and came back a man. There's been more placed on me since I got back. But I think it's all been made so much easier by what I've learned from life and (in) knowing who I am."

Of note, he's starting second baseman and No. 2 returning hitter (.347) this spring for the Cougars. He's hoping to help propel BYU to a College World Series like any good collegiate player. When he's not training or busy working through long days for his degree in economics as a full-time student, he's cherishing life with his wife of two years, Taylor, and adoring every moment he can with six month-old daughter Kalei whom he calls "the sunshine of my life."

There are many sunny days ahead for Nielsen especially if 12th-year BYU coach Vance Law has his way. The Cougars were picked to be second in the Mountain West Conference behind Preseason No. 1 TCU and figure to have the right mix of leadership, experience, solid pitching and defense to go far.

"I'm more excited about this season we have had in my time at BYU," Law said.

BYU already held a special place in the Nielsen household where Dane's mother Wendy is a former Cougars cheerleader and father Gifford starred as an All-American two-sport standout and future Houston Oilers NFL quarterback. His older brother Giff also played basketball for BYU as did grandfather Stan in the 1940s.

The north central Utah valley locale just 40 miles from Salt Lake City has been a backdrop to the Nielsen family for generations though Dane says he hadn't anticipated so many significant moments of his young life unfolding there.

"If you had told me this is where I wouldn't have believed you," he says of the student-athlete-father combo.

He speaks of a current place in life of happiness and completeness that's almost a far cry from vestiges of life a good life in Houston where an ambitious teenager made a big decision, packing his bags and making the same trek to BYU that's become family tradition.

Nielsen graduated from Clements High in 2005 where under the tutelage of coach Herb Espinosa he was a two-time First Team All-District baseball player. An All-District selection on the basketball court as well, he's perhaps best remembered around Greater Houston circles for having played for the Houston Heat squad that won a World Wood Bat championship.

I came to BYU because I knew it was a great school and a great place," said Nielsen, also recruited by Duke, Vanderbilt and renowned Texas Powers Rice, Baylor, UH and TCU. "As far as baseball, I knew the Mountain West and I knew I could play at this level. Personally, I knew this was a place I could challenge myself."

Nielsen had the typical freshman year of college, adjusting to time away from home, wintery climate that doesn't always allow for outdoor practice before April and adapting to college ball as fast and physically demanding as he expected. On the diamond, he had a nice first season, playing 17 games, batting .231, homering and memorably hitting a walk-off single in the 10th inning against Northern Colorado in 2006.

He would leave school to embark on his biggest challenge soon after. Like the more than 45 percent of the BYU student body who engage in missionary excursions on behalf of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints during their college studies, Nielsen took a two-year hiatus for a volunteer mission to Puebla, Mexico.

In an era when college students take fun trips to Florida for spring break and skills-building internships in Corporate America, Nielsen's selflessness uniquely was two-fold. Beside putting class on hold for admirable reasons and taking the school's motto to heart, he shelved a privileged athletic career that offered few fitness guarantees.

"I had friends who told me I was crazy," said Nielsen, disclosing his parents supported him fully though his father believed the break would set him back athletically. "Some people said that I was throwing my athletic career away. That I'd never be the player I was."

It took all of the first few weeks in Mexico for Dane to mildly second guess his decision.

"I remember being there and at once thinking these two years would never end," he says in jest.

But in the ensuing months, he picked up Spanish and gradually adjusted. Routinely, he spoke to natives about Jesus Christ and learned invaluable lessons about the world at large and the people who live in it.

"It was an eye-opener," he said. "I met a lot of different people. I saw poverty, broken families, people without hope...but I also saw a lot of good in people."

"I think I ended up learning as much from them as they learned from me," he said. "If not more."

Returning from Mexico enriched, Nielsen says he learned to appreciate life and what's otherwise taken for granted by too many.

"I left a boy and came back a man," he said

"The way we live our lives is pretty complacent. We're so blessed and don't always know it. Take running water for example. Here we have clean running water to drink and bathe, and have access to when we want it. I saw families there with none of the above. Families with just a portion of what most Americans take for granted. Happy families that were without a lot of material things that we have and we think we need..."

"And yet most of them were happier than us. So, yes, you could say I learned humility."

Returning to Utah in 2008 for his sophomore year, Dane re-acclimated to a college life with perspective and priorities befitting a changed man influenced by such a profound experience.

Balancing homework with a college baseball career was suddenly a lot easier. His purpose and direction that much more defined.

"I've definitely learned how to prioritize... with life and with time," he said. "I think I can go out, work as hard as I can with school, practice or whether it's something I'm trying to learn from the coaches, but relax my mind so I don't stress out."

Perhaps more than anything Nielsen said he's learned the most from marriage. He and girlfriend Taylor Porter were wed December of 2008 before an abbreviated sophomore season spring 2009 in which he appeared in only seven games for the Cougars.

He admitted to feeling "Slow and out of shape" when he returned to baseball ranks, struggling to regain the strength and muscle mass to his 5-10, 180-pound frame. Ironically, his resolve has never been stronger.

"Most of athletics is mental," he said. "Once you learn a skill I believe you can get it back. Now I feel like looking back I weighed more, I was stronger (back then) and faster. I haven't quite gotten all my strength back, and yet I feel like I'm a stronger player because I'm a stronger person now."

"I'm in better position to push my (physical) limits, knowing what I'm capable of," he said. "And I'm able to be more of a team leader, speaking with confidence and conviction in what I have to say. And I think people see that."

Nielsen has high hopes for finishing strong both on and off the field in this his senior season. He's coming off a promising junior year last season in which he earned Academic All-Mountain West Conference recognition in addition to playing a more prominent role in the Cougars' lineup.

Replacing injured starter and co-captain Andrew Law at second in the second week of the regular season Nielsen went on to start 51 of 53 games for BYU. He hit a career best .347 off 70 hits in 202 appearances at the plate. He also doubled 13 times, hit three homers and drove in 39 runs though his biggest highlights might have been homering against intra-state rival Utah and registering a pair of hits in a 5-4 upset win over then fourth-ranked Texas Christian.

A reputable and much earned return to form for BYU's Cougar Council President, an advisory board representing all of the athletic program's student-athletes.

"I'm not the biggest, strongest guy around," Nielsen said. "But I'm also very rarely outworked. My dad always told me, he'd talk to me before games, and he'd ask me questions I'd have to answer, (like) 'Has anyone taken more ground balls than you?'"

"He'd go down a list of things I should be doing to get better. If I could get to the end, answering all his questions 'no' he'd say: 'Then you have nothing to fear.' So that mentality has stayed with me."

BYU is banking on that kind of resolve. The Cougars got off to a 15-12 start with three wins in their first four at home after spending most of the season's first six weeks on the road going everywhere from Washington to Texas to Missouri. They came back with some key wins over the Red Raiders, the Huskies and San Diego State.

Nielsen hit .237 during that stretch, tripling in a March 18 win over Utah and hitting the sacrifice fly to score the game-winner in a 12 inning 7-6 victory over Portland on March 12. His season highlight, if nothing else, merely thriving again, doing something he loves.

"I love my guys here and I don't think I could trade my time here for the world," he said.

LDS Prospect Returns to Diamond

By Bubba Brown, Baseball America, February 21, 2011

Taylor Cole had it all planned out.

Spend a year at the College of Southern Nevada improving his draft stock. Sign with whichever team drafts him, and finally embark on the dream he'd held ever since he could remember--playing baseball for a living.

"I thought that if I went and played junior college ball for a year, I'd be in a better position to get a better deal," said Cole, who was thought to be a top-five-rounds pick out of Las Vegas' Bishop Gorman High in 2007, but fell to the Dodgers in the 26th round due to outsized bonus demands. "For the first half of my junior-college year, baseball and getting drafted was all I wanted to do."

But then a funny thing happened. Cole, a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, met Baltimore Orioles righthander Jeremy Guthrie, also a member of the LDS church. Guthrie, a return missionary, counseled Cole on the benefits of serving a two-year mission, a practice customary, though not required, for 19-year-old LDS men. All of a sudden, signing a pro contract after his freshman year, once almost a foregone conclusion, wasn't such a sure thing.

As word spread that Cole was leaning toward serving a mission, his draft stock plummeted. Despite going 10-3, 1.37 with 87 strikeouts in 92 innings during his freshman year at the CSN, the righthander fell to the Diamondbacks in the 31st round. So Cole followed in Guthrie's footsteps, spurning the lure of professional baseball to serve a mission in Toronto.

Cole, who is now enrolled at Brigham Young, returned from his mission in August of last year and is now facing the difficult challenge of trying to pick up his baseball life where he left off. However, it's not a challenge unique to him. In recent years, notable players like Arkansas' Chase Leavitt, BYU's Sean McNaughton, Tennessee's Eli Iorg and Alabama's Cale Iorg have thrived after returning from LDS missions.

Cole has had to deal with the lengthy process of getting his arm back in shape. Cole spent the last several months slowly rebuilding his shoulder muscles and core strength to ready his arm for the stress of a baseball season. As of early January, Cole still had yet to throw off a mound since his return.

"We want to be very careful with Taylor because we know the potential that he's got," said BYU Coach Vance Law, who noted getting hitters game-ready is typically easier than for pitchers. "We don't want to take any chances on getting him hurt. We have a throwing program we put our guys in, and it's a gradual thing to get their throwing muscles back in shape. We take our time with our pitchers."

As Cole will turn 22 shortly after the draft, spending two years on a mission has expedited his timeframe to sign professionally.

"Without a doubt, 100 percent, I want to sign. I want to make this a one-year stop," Cole said. "BYU is a great place and I have nothing against coming back another year, but I want to sign and get going."
